Want to know more about agglomerated cork?

With practically unlimited durability, this material preserves its characteristics throughout its life. It is a great solution for spaces with specific thermal and acoustic characteristics. It is resistant to abrasion and impact and is flame retardant.

It supports temperatures between -180°C and $+120^{\circ}\text{C}$ and in case of fire does not release toxic gases. The industrial process is 100% natural because 93% of energy consumption is biomass that results from the process itself.

Stripped every nine years from the cork oak ensuring the tree is not damaged or cut, the cork is 100% vegetal, biodegradable and recyclable. The cork oak is the only tree whose bark regenerates itself and can be harvested about 17 times over its 200 years, so extracting cork is a key contribution to the sustainability of the Mediterranean region.
